Finding Your Feet – Review

This Brit romantic dramedy takes a feel-good and amiable, if fairly familiar, look at what it means to find a new spark in life during those later years when everything seems to be set in its ways.

As her 35th wedding anniversary rolls around, middle-class and fairly snobbish Sandra (Imelda Staunton) discovers that her long-time husband Mike (John Sessions) has been having an affair with her best friend. Seething at the betrayal, she leaves her lavish manor lifestyle and turns up on the council estate doorstep of her bohemian, far more easy-going sister Bif (Celia Imrie) whom she hasn't seen in a decade. At first she's utterly bereft of hope for what the future holds away from her marriage and affluent lifestyle, being rude to pretty much everyone she comes into contact with. But helped by her sister's unending positivity in spite of her own troubles, Sandra finds that she's able to enjoy life in a new way, including taking part in Bif's regular dance class and falling into a potential romantic relationship with Bif's boat-dwelling friend Charlie (Timothy Spall).

Directed by Richard Loncraine, who most notably gave us tennis rom-com Wimbledon back in the mid-noughties, this is aimed squarely at the same crowd that went in droves to see The Best Exotic Marigold Hotel; a more mature audience that, let's face it, aren't regularly represented in most multiplex offerings these days.

It presents a familiar mix, one that likeably glides along rather than doing much to challenge. But it's spun into a charming and moving enough little tale with decent and earnest things to say about aging, long-term bonds and grasping at happiness when it seemed the opportunity had long since passed by.

This is nothing we haven't seen before and sometimes the heavy-handed sentimentality and silliness consumes the drama rather than enhances it but it knows what it wants to be and achieves it with a spring in its step and twinkle in its eye.
